Some COOPERACTIVE ASSETS or COMMONS can be used by everyone.
Some others by none!

One of the Commons of Nature, in addition to air, is also the Sky.
No one can use the Sky, which belongs to all, for his own “needs” (or rather desires or whims…).

However, this is what the Russian company StartRocket would propose at the initiative of this “idea” (?) which would consist in polluting, since there are no other words, visually and spatially the sky belonging to all by Advertisements praising the merits of such or such product and a priori rather sweetened drinks…

You will find the Technical details of this Project in different Press reviews (although some “articles” on the subject are strangely similar ..).

What is important to us in the context of the Commons is the usual observation that:

Ultra Capitalism is ready for anything, including, as is often the case, selling what does not belong to it and abusing, in every sense of the word, Natural Resources;

This use de facto depreciates the Natural Resource, probably gradually eliminating it or reducing it to a shambles;

We must reaffirm, each day, the importance of the Commons, of our COOPERACTIVE ASSETS. And to implement the means to preserve them. Then/and include this protection in different laws or in Binational, multiple or international treaties.

Philippe AGRIPNIDIS